The Journal of the National Cancer Institute is a forum for news, information, and ideas related to cancer research, treatment, prevention, and control. Accordingly, all articles and items published in the Journal are signed and, unless otherwise stated, reflect the individual views of the authors and not necessarily the official points of view held by the National Cancer Institute, any other component of the U.S. government, the editors, the editorial board, Oxford University Press, or the organizations with which the authors are affiliated. The mention of trade names, commercial products, or organizations does not imply endorsement by the National Cancer Institute, any other component of the U.S. government, the editors, the editorial board, Oxford University Press, or the organizations with which the authors are affiliated. The editors and publishers have taken all reasonable precautions to verify drug names and doses, the results of experimental work, and clinical findings published in the Journal. The ultimate responsibility for the use and dosage of drugs mentioned in the Journal and in interpretation of published material lies with the medical practitioner, and the editors and publishers cannot accept liability for damages arising from any errors or omissions in the Journal. Please inform the editors of any errors.
